WOOLLY MAMMOTHS

OFFICIAL REPORTER PAY
$10

By Lane T.
from KS

Woolly Mammoths first appeared in Africa about 3-4 million years ago during the last Ice Age. They were about the size of Asian Elephants, with warm furry coats of long brown outer hair and soft fuzzy underwool. They had curved tusks about 11 feet long. Elephants are not descendants of mammoths, but they evolved from a common ancestor.

Most species of mammoths died off about 10,000 years ago. Woolly

Mammoths once roamed free throughout

Eurasia and North America. Wall pictures of mammoths by Stone Age artists can be seen today in ancient European caves, depicting these primitive hunts. A small species of mammoths, however, managed to survive beyond the Ice Age on Wrangle Island off the coast of Siberia. We know so much about them because carcasses have been found in the frozen bogs of Siberia. Not only were they frozen, they had half-digested food in their stomachs, and grass stuck in their teeth. In October of 2000, a very large well-preserved Woolly Mammoth was air-lifted, encased in its 23-ton permafrost block of ice to an underground laboratory where it was slowly and carefully thawed with a hair dryer, in hopes of collecting a good enough DNA sample to actually be able to make a clone of this Woolly Mammoth!
